excitement by the exhibition of a singing nouse, and before the astonishment caused by the cantillating rodent had subsided, a DRAFTS, CHECKS, CARDS, &c., &c. companion monstrosity, in the form of a whistiling oyster, was announced. We are not quite clear as to whether the sybillatory bivaive kept his promise to the ear or not but the singing mouse was a four-legged, furry fact. Since then, domestic vermin, as well as marine shell-fish, have been mute, and it has been reserved for San Francisco to discover, in the year 1868, that the race of musical mice is not extinct. How the liscovery came to be made we will now relate. For some days past the family of Mr. Louis R. Lull, residing on Post street, had been disturbed by very singular and unaccountable noises, proceeding apparently from the ceiling and the walls. The noises were not the familliar squeaking of rats, or the shriller trebles of mice, nor did they resemble in the least the chirpings of crickets, or the atterances of any known insects or vermin. They shifted their position, to, in a highly disturbing and incomprehensible way, and for some time ex-cited a good deal of special wonder. Sug-gestions as to the possibility of spiritual manifestation were made, but Mr. Lull reare trouble to arise out of this question, it is the ferral of the ferra evidence of the existence of what promises to be a whole race of singing mice. Mr. Luil had a little cage made for his captives, and yesterday placed them in the Pioneer's Hall, where they were visited in the course of the day by hundreds of citizens.
